

There Shall Be No Other Gods!

That is the unspoken dogma of every government afraid of losing its grip on power. Not because it's true — but because any alternative would tear the mask off its face.

The state tolerates no god beside itself, no belief without political coloring, no community without control. Because wherever people begin to think independently, its power ends. That's why everyone must be shoved back into the political cage — not out of necessity, but out of calculation.

Politics is not a solution — it is the playground of control. The victims of this order are trained, molded, conditioned — until they not only revere their chains but hunt down anyone who tries to break free. To leave the ideology is not to leave a belief system — it is to break out of a prison cell built inside your mind. And that makes you dangerous. Because you prove that freedom is possible.

Imagine a child born in handcuffs, chained — not with visible iron, but with dogmas, commandments, prohibitions, wrapped in school curricula, media, and rituals. This child will believe the garden it's chained in is the world. And when it grows up, it won't ask why it can't move forward — it will hate itself for not achieving more.

That is how we live. As domesticated utility humans in the stable of ideology. Our perspective reaches only as far as the chain allows. Our creativity withers, our thinking stagnates, our spirit freezes in artificial stasis — triggered the moment they planted in us the belief of the state religion, through forced schooling, propaganda, "education," and punishment. In one strike, free thinking became functioning compliance. The human became a number.

To break this, you need courage — not against the system, but against your own fears. Because abuse doesn't start with violence. It starts with belief. The belief that the system is here for you. That it protects you. That it is just. But that belief is the needle through which the madness was injected into you.

And while you might think you are happy — because the money flows, the calendar is full, the high numbs you — I have to disappoint you: You're not feeling happiness. You're simulating it. Based on an implanted belief. A state of artificial balance in a world full of inner emptiness. Once you start living ideologically free, that addiction will dissolve into thin air. What remains is the original: unmanipulated, uninfluenced, neutral, clear — without ever having needed to meditate. Simply because the dirt they once poured into you no longer lives in your head.

You don't have to agree with me. But you can — if you choose to — begin to think about it. Because thinking is the first step toward freedom.
